Remembrance Day of the United Kingdom

Marking the day of singing the armistice that ended WWI, every year since 1919 ‘at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month’ Remembrance Day (or sometimes informally known as Poppy Day) is observed in the Commonwealth of Nations and their Missions throughout the world to remember the members of their armed forces who have died in the line of duty.

Although scarcely nation-wide, the day is also remembered in India usually marked by tributes and ceremonies in army cantonments, including at the Delhi War Cemetery.

The Indian Army contributed a large number of divisions and independent brigades to the European, Mediterranean and the Middle East theatres of World War I. It is estimated that at least 74,187 Indian soldiers lost their lives in the Great War. Honouring their sacrifice, Field-Marshal Sir Claude Auchinleck, Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army from 1942 asserted that the British “couldn’t have come through both wars [World War I and II] if they hadn’t had the Indian Army.”

Sandhyadipa has been teaching Odissi dance for the last 25 years. Sandhyadipa is currently settled in the United States and in actively involved in performing, promoting and teaching Odissi dance and music.

Ms Sandhyadipa gave a heart-warming show including several aspects of Odissi dance. She started with a Stuti to Jagannath, the Lord of the Universe. The piece depicted Lord Rama, who conquered Ravana with the help of Hanuman to save his Sita's life. There were dance items dedicated to Lord Krishna, one is a pure dance item depicting the joys of spring, the other telling a love story about Radha and his flirtatious Krishna, who spent the night with another Gopi. The last items was about Dashavatara, the ten incarnations of Lord Vishnu.

Kuchipudi dance performance by Gabriella Tóth and Tarangam Group

17 October, 2017

On 17 October, 2017, Ms Gabriella Tóth, Kuchipudi teacher in ASCC performed in ASCC presenting her new performance titled ‘Om Mangalam OM’, which is a dance piece dedicated to Indian Gods. In the course of the presentations of ‘OM Mangalam OM’ a homage was paid to the most significant Hindu dancing gods and goddesses. The works of dance art composed on sacred poems in praise of the Hindu deities (such as Shloka, Stuti, Bhajan, Sankirtana, Ashtaka, Stotra, Mantra, Arati) displayed the various type of dances of the deities. In the musical compositions the authentic instrumental music alternated with the scoring of light music, fusing the classical and the today-style of spiritual music.

These myths speak of the creation of the world as the dance of God. Rhythmic sound is at the source of all creation and the gods are the power through which the life-force manifests. The creator, unmoved, but at the same time the moving force behind events, is the central point around which everything turns, as it holds its peace, encircling the movement and the immobility as well. The real peace is the invisible divine centre around which all creation dances.

On the occasion of ‘Divali’ Festival of Lights, the group dedicated this performance to Lord Ganapati who removes the obstacles and brings light, and Goddess Mahalakshmi who represents the ‘Shakti’, the divine female energy.

The graceful movements and outstanding Abhinaya of Ms Gabriella enchanted the audience. Around 50 people attended the event.

Amrita Sher-Gil Cultural Centre organized Mohiniattam dance performance by Brigitta Hegedűs on 21 November, 2017. Mohini Attam, one of the most beautiful classical dances of India is rarely seen in Hungary as there are no representatives of this style in the country. Therefore the occasion was unique; moreover, one of the performers, Ms Brigitta Hegedűs is of Hungarian origin (living in Germany). She has already performed in our cultural centre and at Ganga-Danube Cultural Festival of India.

The performance started with a Ganapati Stuti, asking for the God's blessings. It was followed by a pure dance item called Jatiswaram. Then Ashratapati followed, showcasing the beauties of spring through a story of Radha and Krishna. The performance concluded with a Rama Saptam, depicting episodes of Rama.

The audience witnessed a wonderful show full of emotions and very descriptive performance of the skilled artist. Around 100 people attended the event.
India on course to replace Japan as third largest economy by 2027

India continues to be the fastest growing economy in the world, growing at about 7 per cent, and is on course to become the third largest economy in the world by 2027 outpacing Japan.

The growth is driven by a number of factors where the middle-class is seen to see huge growth in India, according to a report by The Economist Intelligence Unit.

Sharing details of the report on the sidelines of the NEC C&C User Forum & iExpo in Japan on Thursday, Simon Baptist, global Chief Economist of The Economic Intelligence Unit, based on a report on the 'Safe Cities Index 2017,' Security in a rapidly urbanising world, said the global economy is projected to grow at about 2.9 per cent in 2017 as against 2.3 per cent in 2016.

While China’s growth is likely to be slow due to the Government reigning in credit and the first US recession in a decade predicted to arrive by 2020, India will be one of the economies that will continue to grow.

“Irrespective of any changes in the economy, we believe India will grow at over 7 per cent over the next decade and achieve higher growth rates. While the growth of the middle class will be key to driving this transformation in India, in China the transformation will be due to the growth of the middle-class to higher income groups,” he said.

The study shows that there would be steady growth in urbanisation by 2050 and this would be pronounced in Asia and Africa.

Referring to investments flowing into countries, he said investments are often made due to the promise a city holds rather than a country or a state in particular.

Here is why these 5 incredible women cracked the Forbes 100 Most Powerful Women List for 2017

The 14th edition of the annual “World’s 100 Most Powerful Women” released by Forbes featured five Indian women leaders – namely ICICI Bank’s MD & CEO Chanda Kochhar (ranked 32); Roshni Nadar Malhotra (57), executive director and CEO of HCL Enterprise; Kiran Mazumdar-Shaw (64), founder, Chairman and MD of Biocon; Shobhana Bhartia (92), Chairperson and Editorial Director, HT Media Ltd and finally Bollywood actress and global celebrity Priyanka Chopra just making the cut at number 97.

This list spans achievers from seven categories or “power bases”: billionaires, business, finance, media, politics, philanthropists/NGOs and technology, according to Forbes.

All regular fixtures on the list, Chanda Kochhar laid her claim to a spot on this prestigious list this time after becoming the first Indian woman to receive the prestigious Woodrow Wilson Award for Global Citizenship, joining the ranks of Hillary Clinton and Condoleezza Rice, amongst other things, writes Forbes. The success of another community outreach program spearheaded by her – ICICI Digital Village – was also a contributing factor. Lastly, just this September, Chanda “made history when she took the bank’s insurance business public, the first IPO of a general insurer in India,” notes Forbes. After receiving a 63 percent hike, she is now one of India’s highest paid private bank CEOs.

The next highest ranking India power woman, Roshni Nadar Malhotra has been the CEO of HCL Corporation since 2009 when she was all of 27 years old and became executive director as well, a year later. Besides steering all strategic decisions for the $7.5 billion enterprise, Roshni dons many other hats, including serving as a trustee of the Shiv Nadar Foundation, which has established some of India’s top colleges and schools.

Kiran Mazumdar-Shaw, Managing Director of Biocon Limited, also from the tech sphere, has been described by Forbes as “India’s richest self-made woman,” and the company she founded in 1978 is Asia’s largest insulin producer with a factory in Malaysia’s Johor region.

Shobhana Bhartia helms media major HT Media – India’s largest listed media company – as chairperson and editorial director. Under her tutelage, the business weekly MintAsia was launched in Singapore in 2013 – and the group even bought Webitude, a social and digital media outfit.

Lastly, Priyanka Chopra, an actress with humble beginnings in Bollywood after she was crowned Miss World, has risen to Global fame by bagging roles in multiple Hollywood big banner films and TV shows -including ABC’s Quantico, the latest film in the Baywatch franchise, amongst others. is also the UNICEF Global Goodwill Ambassador. She’s one of TV’s highest-earning actresses and the first Indian actor to lead a drama series on American television. “Passionate about protecting children’s rights, she’s a global UNICEF Goodwill Ambassador and United Nations Foundation Girl Up Champion, and her nonprofit The Priyanka Chopra Foundation for Health and Education provides schooling and medical care,” notes her Forbes bio.

“The 100 women on the list represent a new dynamic of influencers and are transforming industry culture. They’re women who are building billion-dollar brands, calling the shots in the financial markets, and crisscrossing the globe to broker international agreements,” said a Forbes statement issued on November 1.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel managed to retain the number one position seven years in a row and has, in fact, held the spot 12 times in total. UK Prime Minister Theresa May came in second. Who is leading her country through Brexit — a historic and transforming time for the European Union?

The four criteria that Forbes takes into account while determining the worthiest candidates are money (either net worth, company revenues, assets under management, or GDP); media presence; spheres of influence; and impact, analysed both within the context of each woman’s field (media, technology, business, philanthropy, politics and finance) and outside of it.

‘Have you ever been frightened this much?’ — I ask my photographer colleagues. ‘No, not this much’ come back the joint answer. The driver and three of us are in a car on our way from Delhi to Mandawa. We took off late from Delhi. The night suddenly fell on us somewhere in the middle of our journey on the winding roads. On the top of if it a blanket of fog so thick came down that when outside the car we could not see each other even only a few yards away. When we stopped for a few minutes one of my colleagues shown an ultrasound picture from his telephone to me. I could not work out what the image was, so he helped: ‘that is my child to be. He is a three months old embryo now. I would have still liked to see him when he is born if we ever get back in one piece’. But once back in the car in the pitch black and in the thick fog our driver did not slow down from 80 miles. All in vain we asked him to reduce our speed. We tried not to look to the front but there was nothing to see on the side because of the dense fog. So, I just explained to my friends yet again what was waiting for us when we arrive. I don’t know how but the driver got us to the palace / castle of the Maharaja of Mandawa. When we finally stopped that was when we realized the enormous difference between a tip and what we were about to give to our driver. That would be, gratuities for allowing us to survive the journey. It was 11 o’ clock in the evening already, everything is quiet, the castle lit up with lights and torches, but the restaurant was open, five waiters waiting for the three of us.

My friends only saw and appreciated fully the magnificence of a Maharaja’s palace next day. This is the India Westerners read and dream about with its elegance and grandeur. We were in the Shekhawati region of Rajasthan, the most eastern extent of the Thar Desert, the home of the painted houses, the ‘Havelis’. From the terrace outside our rooms we saw the roofs of the town below us. All day we walked about to find the three different stages of these very special houses. Mandawa a station of the former Silk Road was like an Open Art Gallery when the rich businessmen kept their families here. The dominant merchants built fortified castles for their families. They had the marvels of the world in this part of India unknown yet, so they had them painted on the outside walls of their houses. They wanted to show to their wives such curious Western inventions like telephones, a European woman in a chauffeur-driven car or the Wright Brothers attempting their flight. The wives were rarely allowed to leave their homes. The painted houses possess a richness unparalleled in other parts of India. For the women these Havelis attempted to ward off loneliness while the men were away on their business trips. The men with the painted walls wanted to bring colour to the parched desert landscape of the Shekhawati region. A more mundane theory is that the rich businessmen were keen to demonstrate their wealth. The houses were built of grand proportions and they were decorated with murals, Moghul influenced floral arabesques and geometric designs. The major themes are Hindu mythology, history, folk tales like Rama and Sita chauffeured in a car or people listening to a gramophone. For the delight of the younger travellers there are some erotic images also, but most are defaced or destroyed by simply white washed over. The painters of these pictures often have not seen the inventions they painted about but only recreated what the merchants told them. Some but not many of these houses are redecorated and are operating as hotels or antique shops. In the 1930’s unfortunately most of the owners moved away with the business to Calcutta leaving the houses behind that are in very bad need of repair by now. And this brought about the third stage, the tourists desire for antiques. That started with taking doors, windows, statues but by now even stones from the buildings are being carried away and sold.

‘I hope you have a good insurance because mirrors you don’t have any left’ – I sum up the situation as our driver stops abruptly. In 20 minutes we were hit twice by speeding cars on the narrow serpentine. Once overtaking us and cutting in sharp to avoid a major accident and once coming opposite and just missing us. Each time we lost a mirror and the cars did not even slow down either time.

From the reasonably flat countryside, we start climbing towards one of the most popular and exquisite hill stations ‘Nainital’ in the state of Uttarakhand. It is a distinct and famous tourist destination of India. 2000 metres high in the Himalayan Mountains it is like a dazzling jewel. Narrow, winding road is leading up to the hill station once a favourite summer location of the British escaping the heat of Delhi, Bombay or Calcutta. On the road towards Nainital the peace of the whole area with lakes, valleys and nature’s bounty captures the traveller. The mansions, palaces, villas, guesthouses and hotels are set around the Naini Lake, or Naini ‘tal’ this is where the place got its name from. Driving around the town looking for a parking place we pass Hindu, Buddhist and Sikh temples, and a few Mohamedan mosques. We are told that the now flat Mall that was part of the steep hillside until a major landslide flattened it in the late 19th century. In the middle of the town the market place is called ‘Tibet Bazaar’ but the faces are Indian. After a whole day of travelling in the car it is obvious that we are looking at the open-air restaurants, preparing magnificent looking and smelling dishes. We don’t consider it for long but give in and each of us purchases half a chicken cooked with onions, potatoes, paprika, chilly and who knows what other delicacies. While devouring the first-rate, tasty supper we don’t mention even once the dangers of eating meals cooked on the streets. And since we don’t talk and don’t think about it there are no penalties either. With the tummy full we are much more relaxed looking at the sights just before closing except the market place. It is around nine in the evening and the bazaar is crowded with Indian tourists. The vendors and the mostly unemployed guides are all bitterly complaining that the place is not only peaceful but far too quiet compared to other years. True enough apart from us we don’t see other foreign visitors at this place. We are told it is because of the monetary policies of abolishing some of the old notes and not issuing enough new ones in time. Our presence is not just noted; Indian youngsters ask and line up for selfies with us.

Finally, dead tired we retire to our room in a hotel still further up in the hills away from the lake that is housing a few hundred students. It is bitterly cold in our room. After all it is January and we are 2000 metres high up in the Himalayas. We ask for some electric heaters. About half an hour later it is beginning to be warm enough so that after sipping some brandy to make sure that we have no lasting effects of our street food adventure we fall asleep. But not for long! One of us jumps up coughing, choking, pulls the connector out of the wall socket and tears the windows open. One of the heaters was burning leaving the room full of smoke and ice cold even after the airing. The next day as if the lakeside wanted to compensate us for the fire we appreciate what this popular area can offer. On the way there we admire the beautiful valleys, and at place the ferocious rocks threateningly hanging over and above the serpentine. At the lakeside we see some colourful boats. Some on the water some half under water. At one of the piers a huge deflated pink ball is placed. A girl steps into the ball, a man zips her in and starts pumping air in the ball. When the ball is inflated the girl starts first dancing, then walking and a bit later running in it. A few yards away a wire rope track is stretching between the two sides of the lake. With a wheel rolling on the wire rope people can slide from one side to the other. Until the rope operator starts shaking the rope and the passenger are dipped in the ice-cold lake. Laughs and great screams follow depending whether the person is in or out of the see-sawing rope.

We are standing on a bridge and contemplating in which ashram the Beatles stay did when they visited Rishikesh. The town is located where the Ganges comes down from the Himalayas. It catapulted into Western fame when in the 1960’s the four pop musicians from Liverpool dropped by for a visit to Maharishi Mahesh Yogi’s ashram. Since that time the small town is known as the Yoga Capital of the world. As we walk about the rocks and gravel on the shores of the Ganges we notice a Brahmin clad in his orange robe sitting in a plastic armchair reading his paper. We don’t have to guess for long. He looks over the pages and calls out to me. ‘If you are looking for the Beatles ashram it is closed now’. As we look around in a squint we can see the history of the last 40-50 years in this town. Following the Beatles’ visit thousands of Westerners engulfed the quiet place surrounded by hills on three sides. To accommodate the tourists many ashrams were built. Perhaps too many because over the years the interest dwindled, and many ashrams closed, or have not even been completed. We enjoy the view of the Lakshman Jhula suspension bridge that looks towards a huge temples complex. The river is clean here. Pilgrims dip, young kids dive into the holy river, we just put a foot into the Ganges so that we can tell, it is very cold coming down from the Himalayas. We don’t have to look for long to find among the many ashrams one that is beautiful and obviously flourishing. Here if one can get a place- as they are fully booked- the first three days are free of charge. After that a double bedroom, food-lodgings and yoga course costs 600 Rupees a day. The course lasts for two weeks.

Benefits of Yoga for Depression

“Yoga teaches us to cure what need not be endured and endure what cannot be cured”

–B.K.S. Iyengar

People are said to be depressed when they are feeling sad, empty, hopeless, dejected, helpless, worthless, guilty and do not want to partake in any activity due to loss of interest. Insomnia or hypersomnia, difficulty in concentration, making decisions and memory, general pessimistic outlook, irritability and restlessness, lack of sex drive and at worst, suicidal thoughts or attempts are all said to be symptoms related to depression. It is a general state of low mood in which our thoughts, feelings, actions and sense of well-being is affected. (Clinical depression should not be taken lightly, so please seek professional help if needed).

Yoga is a group of physical, mental and spiritual practices originating in India over 2000 years ago and listed as UNESCO’s intangible cultural heritage in 2016. It can generally be referred to as the union or harmonizing system of the body, mind and spirit. When we do yoga, the body’s movement and breathing are in a focused and controlled way. There is a mind-body connection which brings about alignment, balance, release from suffering and inner peace. The body becomes strong and flexible, the respiratory, circulatory, digestive and hormonal systems are greatly improved and there is emotional stability and clarity of mind.

Physically and mentally, these activities lead to the secretion of hormones by the brain and the nervous system called endorphins (endogenous morphine), the body’s natural feel good chemical. Endorphins activate opiate receptors in the body, inhibiting the transmission of pain signals, causing an analgesic or pain-relieving effect and producing a feeling of euphoria (experiencing pleasure and intense feelings of well-being and happiness). Changes in the levels of serotonin, a neurotransmitter that regulates mood and helps to reduce depression and anxiety, can also be seen.

It can be said that the parasympathetic nervous system or the ‘rest and digest’ system is mostly activated during yoga. This brings about a general calming effect on the mind and body. The heart rate is reduced, blood pressure lowered and respiration is made easier. Some yoga poses (known as asanas), for example the downward-facing dog, dolphin pose and the headstand, promote slow deep breathing that causes an increase in the level of carbon dioxide, a natural sedative that produces a soothing or calming effect. In contrast, there is a decrease in the level of the stress hormone, cortisol, thus reducing the body’s stress response. There is a general vasodilation which causes increase in blood flow and oxygen to the brain and other tissues that need it together with the calming of nerves and muscle relaxation. Relaxation is an integral part of yoga that helps the body to release tension and the mind to slow down and eventually settle.

Depression is often followed by low self-esteem. Yoga teaches self-acceptance, self-love and self-respect. These all are then directed outwards in the acceptance, love and respect for others creating peace and harmony. The art of learning about our body and its many functions in such an intimate way, guiding it in various poses and feeling good about its many sometimes surprising capabilities while doing so, is truly magical. In this act of self-development and self-realization, we also learn more about the mind and how to direct our thoughts and reactions in everyday life. There are noticeable changes in our attitudes and the way we approach life in general. People who do yoga regularly are said to be more positive and optimistic in contrast to the negative and pessimistic characteristics associated with depression. And of course, we can agree that when you look better, you feel better. Doing yoga testifies to this by building the body up, strengthening and toning the muscles, making you fit in a really healthy limber way, thus, boosting self-confidence.

While in states of depression, people may find it difficult to focus on the good in their lives. Yoga helps us to live in the present moment. What we learn from concentrating on the pose and our breathing is helpful in directing our thoughts throughout the day. We apply the knowledge of healthy breathing techniques to ease and calm the mind and get through frustrations that may appear in our daily lives. Practicing the art of yoga creates an awareness of the stored emotions in our body that are not being expressed. The stretches help to release the sadness, anger, guilt and other emotions that we may be carrying which are all related to feeling depressed. For example, the eagle pose has been said to force our concentration on the present, keeping the mind on the here and now.

Dealing with insomnia can often be really tiring and stressful and make us irritable but practicing yoga helps to resolve the poor sleep quality often associated with depression. Yoga poses like the standing forward bend and the Sukhasana (easy pose) can help to wind down for a good night’s sleep. Practicing yoga regularly has been proven to increase libido by improving sexual function through poses that increase circulation to the pelvic region, make us more flexible, aware and present in the moment. Improving and maintaining a healthy body image and self-esteem are advantages of yoga that also makes us more comfortable in our own skin which is beneficial in sexual relationships. Examples of poses are the cat/cow flow that help to strengthen the kegel muscles that contract during orgasms and the bound angle pose that stretches the inner thighs and opens the hips in addition to increased blood flow to the pelvis for greater energy and vitality.

Yoga keeps you intrigued, enticed and challenged. There are so many poses to learn every day, new levels of flexibility and balance to attain all infused with the fun knowledge of growing, being active and feeling useful. These can leave us feeling vibrant, energetic, enthusiastic and full of life. The body's ability to react to stress more flexibly is increased with increasing heart variability. The therapy for depression greatly involves figuring out the issues underlying the feelings and working them out layer by layer. There are yoga asanas for basically every characteristic or symptom associated with depression that induces a feeling of calm, relaxation, reduced anxiety and inner peace which eventually makes us feel unstuck and motivated.

Amikor a Mester Kőszala tartományban alamizsna-kérő vándorútjá során Nalakapáná, azaz Nádszálból ívő nevű faluba érkezett, és a falu melletti lótusz-tó partján fekvő kétaka-erdőben időzött, a nádszálakkal kapcsolatban mondta el az alábbi történetet. Ugyanis akkortájt történt, hogy a Nalakapáná melletti lótusz-tóban megfürdő szerzetesek a szerzetesnövendékeket bambusz-nád-szálakat hozattak, hogy tűtartót készítsenek belőlük. De mikor láttak, hogy minden nádszál belül végig üreges, bogok nélkül, a Mesterhez járultak, és megkérdezték:

- Urunk, bambusz-nád-szálakat hozattunk, hogy tűtartót készítsünk belőlük, de ezek a nádszálak töv/előlheggyügy végig üregesek, bogok nélkül. Mi ennek az oka?

- Szerzetesek, ez egy régebbi rendelésen következménye - szólt a Mester, és elmondta a múltbeli történetet:

Valaha ez az erdőszeli táj súrű erdőség volt. Az itt lévő lótusz-tóban egy víziördög lakott, amelyik mindenki felfeltételével, hogy a vízbe belépve, akkor megértheti, hogy ezek a nádszálak ahol ezeket az üregeket hozzák létre. De a Mester megpróbálta megérteni az oka vagy növeli a gyökérzésének méretét. Az ilyen helyen bőséges és mély vizeslakó található.

- Kedveseim, ebben az erdőben méregfák és démonok-lakta tavak is vannak. Mielőtt olyan gyümölcsöt fogyasztanátok, amilyenből még nem ettek, vagy olyan vízbeli innátok, amilyenből még nem itatok, először

- Miért nem itatok, kedveseim? - kérdezte.

- A te érkezésedre vártunk.

- Jól tettétek, kedveseim, hogy nem ittátok a vízből. Szörnyetegek szállták meg. A víziördög látta, hogy nem eresztek le a vízhez. Meghasította a vizet, kiemelkedett belőle rémítő alakban, kék hassal, sápadt arccal, vérvörös kézzel és lábbal, és megkérdezte:

- Miért ültök itt? Ereszkedjetek le a vízhez, igyatok!

A Mester tehát megoldást talált, és ezt a verset mondta:

Odamenő nyomot látok, de visszatérő nyom sehol.
Hát nádszálon szívjunk vizet, hogy ne vesszünk oda mi is.

Így beszél a Bódhiszatta, és szót, hogy hozzanak neki egy bambusznádszálat. Felidézte a Tökéletességeket, hivatkozott az Igazság erejére, és belefújt a nádszálat. A nádszál végéig üregessé vált, anélkül, hogy a bogok megmaradtak volna benne. Így egymás után hozatva a nádszálat, beléjük fújt, úgy adta tovább. Ezután körüljárta a lótusz-tavat, és megparancsolta:

- Minden itt növő nádszál végig üreges legyen!

Ez idő óta e tő körül növő nád mind üreges belül.

A Bódhiszatta a parancs kimondása után fogott egy nádszálat, és leült a parton. A nyolcvenezre majom mindegyike szintén fogott egy-egy nádszálat, és körbeülték a tavat. Amikor a Bódhiszatta a nádszálon vizet szivott, a többiek szintén a parton üve szívítik a vizet. Így inni tudtak, anélkül, hogy a víziördög egyet is el tudott volna fogni közülük. Ekkor dühösen tanyájára távozott. A Bódhiszatta is visszatért az erdőbe kisérőivel.

Amikor a Mester befejezte a tanulságos történetet, mondván: "Szerzetesek, egy régebbi rendelésem következménye az, hogy ezek a nádszálok végig üregesek", utána a kapcsolatot is feltárta a születések között:

- Akkor Dévadatta volt a víziördög, Buddha gyülekezete volt a nyolcvenezre majom, a találékonk majomkirály pedig én voltam.

PRAVASI BHARTIYA KENDRA (PBK)

The Indian Diaspora constitutes a significant economic, social and cultural force in the world today. Overseas Indians estimated at over 28 million are spread across the world. Their industry, enterprise, education, expertise and economic success are widely recognized. A High Level Committee on Indian Diaspora, headed by Shri L. M. Singhvi, had recommended in January 2002 that the Government must renew and strengthen linkages of overseas Indians to their place of origin and with each other. The committee recommended that a Pravasi Bharatiya Bhavan should be set up to emerge as the focal point for networking between India and its overseas Indian community; and as a suitable place which would commemorate the trials, tribulations, the evolution and achievements of the Indian Diaspora. Taking this recommendation forward in January 2004, at the second Pravasi Bhartiya Divas (PBD) organized in Delhi, then Prime Minister Shri Atal Bihari Vajpayee announced that the Government will set up the Pravasi Bharatiya Kendra in New Delhi. The Foundation Stone of the Kendra was laid by the then P.M. Dr. Manmohan Singh at 9th PBD in January, 2011. Ground Breaking was done by then Minister of Overseas Indian Affairs on 28.04.2011 and construction started in April, 2013. Contract for construction of PBK was awarded to National Building Construction Corporation (NBCC) on turnkey basis. Pravasi Bharatiya Kendra located at the heart of the Capital in Plots No.15A, 15B and 15D, Dr. Rizal Marg, Chanakyapuri, New Delhi is a tribute to the overseas Indian community; and commemorates their migration to various parts of the world, the challenges they faced abroad, their achievements and contributions. Over time, the Kendra is expected to develop into a hub of activities for sustainable, symbiotic and mutually rewarding economic, social and cultural engagement between India and its Diaspora. Activities, seminars, events, workshops pertaining to the Indian Diaspora are expected to be organized in PBK. The Museum in the Kendra will depict the history of migration of the overseas Indian community; their experiences and contributions. In the Kendra’s state-of-the-art auditorium, multi-purpose halls, Conference and seminar halls – workshops and conferences with overseas Indians and on issues pertaining to them would be organized on a regular basis. The Kendra will also house the autonomous bodies India Centre for Migration, a think-tank working on issues pertaining to Indian migrant workers and the India Development Foundation for Overseas Indians, a not-for-profit Trust promoting contributions to flagship programmes in India. The Library in PBK is a valuable repository of material about the Indian Diaspora including books written by overseas Indians in different languages. With an emphasis on digital material, the library will provide access to online journals and prestigious library resources.

Scholarship Programmes for Diaspora Children

Scholarship Programme for Diaspora Children (SPDC) was introduced in 2006-07 to make higher education in Indian Universities/Institutes in different fields (except medical and related courses) in India accessible to the children of overseas Indians (PIOs) and Non- resident Indian students (NRIs) and promote India as a centre for higher studies.

Know India Programme (KIP) is a flagship initiative for Diaspora engagement which familiarizes Indian-origin youth (18-30 years) with their Indian roots and contemporary India, through a three-week orientation programme organised by the Ministry. In 2016, the scheme was revamped to increase duration from 21 to 25 days, with a 10-day visit to one or two States and preference given to PIOs from Girmitiya countries. Since 2004, 40 KIPs have been organized in partnership with State Governments with a total of 1293 participants. From 2016, six KIPs a year are being organised. For the first time, four KIP groups participated in the Youth Pravasi Bharatiya Divas and the 14th Pravasi Bharatiya Divas Convention from 7 to 9 January 2017 in Bengaluru.

Indian-origin youth submit their applications for participation in the KIP to the Indian Missions/Posts abroad. A maximum of 40 Indian Diaspora youth are selected for each programme and provided full hospitality in India. 90% of the total cost of international airfare is also paid by the Ministry. The entire process of applying, processing etc. is now through a portal (kip.gov.in).
